Commentary

November proved to be very strong as all of the broad market indices posted strong gains as shown below.

Leading indicators in both Canada and the United States continue to point to improving economic conditions. Overall confidence in the US financial system continues to improve as some of the larger US Banks continue to repay government funds and raise private capital. However, credit expansion through lending is still very sluggish and this will likely have the effect of dampening the recovery as many small businesses in particular have not been able to access capital. Concerns over commercial real estate and a still weak US housing market continue to weigh on the prospect of a more robust recovery.

A surprisingly strong housing market and continued increases in commodity prices have continued to provide support to the Canadian economy.

Although economic conditions are continuing to improve, double digit unemployment in the U.S. is likely to keep fiscal and monetary stimulus in place for some time to come. The low levels of interest rates around the world are proving to provide significant fuel to propel the prices of financial assets and commodities, as can be seen by the strong gains achieved by almost every stock market and commodity since the March lows. The so called "carry trade" in which investors borrow US dollars at low interest rates and buy other financial assets or commodities appears to be a major factor in the continuing strong financial market and commodity performance.

As Canadian and US government fixed income yields continue to remain at very low absolute and relative rates, this should continue to be very supportive to the strong dividend paying companies.

Attractive dividend yields, low historic valuations and significant option premiums available in the market place continue to bode well for the portfolio. The Manager continues to actively manage the relative weightings of the companies held within the portfolio.
